LEAD PIPE FLUSHING

Ontario's drinking water is among the safest in the world - however, processes are required to minimize the exposure of lead in drinking water. While the risk of lead in drinking water is minimal, precautions are necessary when it comes to children. Young children are more sensitive to lead absorption, creating neurological and blood disorders if overexposed to lead. Testing and procedures are necessary to ensure our drinking water is even safer.

Increased lead levels detected in drinking water often originate from lead pipes servicing a facility or solder (containing high levels of lead) or fixtures used in plumbing. Older buildings (constructed before the 1950s) likely contain lead water mains, service lines, plumbing and plumbing connections. These factors combined with standing water with advanced corrosive properties can cause lead to accumulate in water delivered to drinking fountains and faucets that children can access in a school or day care system.
